Join us to support Oregon's youth!

40% of youth with intellectual or developmental disability (IDD) will also experience a mental health condition, but historically there has been little connection between providers focused on mental health and those serving the IDD community. Since 2012, the Youth IDD/Mental Health Summit has worked to change that.

By bringing together mental health and IDD professionals we foster connections, exchange of information, and collaboration so that the young people of Oregon who experience IDD and mental health conditions can receive the appropriate support, care, and nurturing environments they need.

Building connections; exchanging ideas

2024 will be the first in-person Youth IDD/Mental Health Summit since 2019. We'll be meeting in late summer at the LaSells-Stewart Conference Center on Oregon State University's Corvallis campus. Shifting to an in-person format will help reach the core goal of the summit—building relationships between professionals who serve youth with dual diagnoses in diverse capacities.

These connections and the exchange of expertise create opportunities for revolutions in how these young people receive care, in turn helping them live their lives on their terms, meet their goals, and have the experiences and relationships they want.

Why sponsor the summit?

By sponsoring the summit, you'll help us keep attendance fees for professionals in the field to a minimum and ensure that scholarships are available to those who cannot afford them. Keeping costs low ensures that as many professionals of all kinds as possible are able to attend.

You'll also be putting your organization in front of hundreds of people in the IDD and mental health communities, helping to expand your audience and display your support for Oregon's youth experiencing IDD and mental health conditions.
